Without reviewing the file to refresh my memory, it is my recollection that I did not suggest analyzing the videotaping system in officer Ramsour's patrol car because Mike Heiskel pretty well discredited her explanation for why she did not record the events; Roy looked good on the videotape made at the police station; and he was convicted because of the blood test results. Stated differently, even if we could prove that her videotaping system recorded the events and that she deliberately erased the recording, this evidence would not have been material in view of the fact that the jury saw how good Roy looked at the station but his blood test result was well over the legal limit.
